A small complex of 19th Century frame buildings appear here in the mid 19th cnetury on the Road from Lancaster to Bald Friar Ferry. In fact, there were many of these drover's routes which spurred development along these roads. A store operated across the road on the Grubb Property and an office on this property which was owned by J. McCullough in 1877.
The buildings are typical mid 19th Ceetury two story three bay by one room structures.

WOLF PROPERTY

The Wolf property circa 1860 is located just north of St. Patrick's Church and south of Redhill Road. The property has two frame houses and some barn buildings. The main two story house faces West and on a north/south axis while the smaller two story probable tenant house faces south and on a east/west axis.

The two and one-half story hall/parlor main block is three bays across by one room deep. The structure rests on an uncoursed fieldstone foundation and is totally sheathed with aluminum siding over weatherboard. The low pitched roof is covered with composition tile. The eaves are extended with a short return on the gable ends. An "L" addition is attached to the East side along with shed additions to it. A single story shead roof porch extends across the main facade.

The main facade has symmetrical fenestration with an entrance in the central bay. The window sash is six-over-six on the second floor and a replaced one-over-one on the first. The front door has a three light transom overhead. The late 19th Century door has a glazed panel above the lockrail. The front porch roof is supported by square piers with decorative corner brackets. The north end is devoid of much detail other than an oval window in the western bay. The south facade has a six-over-six light on each floor.

Entrance was not permitted in this case but not particularly important due to its altered state.

The second frame structure is a much smaller house with four bays across the south facade and one room deep. The house rests on an uncoursed stone foundation and is covered with weatherboards. The medium sloped slate roof has extended eaves. There is a central stretcher bond stove stack. The main facade fenestration is symmetrical with nine-over-six sash windows on the first floor and six-over-six on the second. The trim is plain. Entrances are located in the central two bays. The eastern six panel door has a three light transom while the other entrance has a four panel door. A two bay shed roof protects the two entrances and is supported by square piers.

The interior is very plain with a winder stair in the northwest corner of the west room. The first and second floors are divided into two rooms.

Located adjacent to both structures is a 19th Century barn and root cellar.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE[1]

The Wolf property retains some architectural significance since it forms a side complex of buildings that rarely survive. In fact, the owners mentioned they may tear down the tenant house.
The main house has lost most of its 19th Century character except for a few details. There is a small crossroads at the corner of this property and a store operated across the street in 1877. The word "Office" also appears on the map and may refer to the tenant house structure. A J. McCullough seems to have owned the property in 1877 and Milton Alexander in 1858.
